March of Dimes top priority was to restore funding to the Florida Birth Defects Registry (FBDR) at the Department of Health.

The registry records birth defects in Florida to identify which are occurring and if there is geographical clustering. Information is then used to identify areas in the state where more research is necessary to help eliminate birth defects in the future. Over the last four years the FBDR has received cut after cut. The program went from $400,000 down to a mere $97,000, but now thanks to the efforts of our volunteers, the Senate and the House of Representatives proposed full restoration of the funding to $450,000.

Another priority for the March of Dimes was to expand the Newborn Screening Program to include Severe Combined Immunodeficiency Disease (SCID).

SCID, also know as "bubble boy" disease is a curable illness in which an infant fails to develop a normal immune system. If this is detected at birth, a bone marrow transplant is usually needed and the infant can live a healthy life. March of Dimes, along with the Florida Newborn Screening Advisory Council and the US Department of Health believes that SCID should be added to the list of diseases that a newborn is screened for. This will not only save lives, save families but will also save the State and health insurance companies the cost of a lifetime of hospital care. March of Dimes volunteers along with the passion Representative Matt Hudson helped to secure $1.875 million to start this program in Florida. This was vetoed last year by Governor Scott so we are working hard to make sure this does not happen again.

Although these items successfully passed the Florida Legislature they are now in the hands of Governor Scott who has to sign or veto line items in the budget.

If you are interested in helping to protect this funding and protect babies, please contact our Director of Public Affairs, Melissa K. Joiner at mjoiner@marchofdimes.com..

Brooke Elizabeth Elmore was born at 29 weeks weighing only 2 pounds and 6 ounces. She spent the first 60 days of her life, critically ill in the Neonatal Intensive Care Unit. The incubator that she spent all her time in was donated by the March of Dimes and her parents truly believe that her life would be very different if it weren't for the March of Dimes and the special Nurses and Doctors that cared for her. Brooke is now 3 years old and a typical healthy, happy and helpful little girl, especially with your younger brother Christopher. Her parent's prayers have been answered and now they are excited to give back in hopes of saving other babies and helping other families.

healthy babies are worth the wait

Did you know that a baby's brain at 35 weeks of pregnancy weighs only two-thirds of what it will weight at 39-40 weeks? A normal, healthy pregnancy typically lasts 40 weeks. Elective, scheduled deliveries occur for a variety of reasons, often during the last weeks of pregnancy when the baby is still growing and developing. Babies born even a few weeks early are at greater risk than full-term babies of serious problems including respiratory distress, delayed brain development, re-hospitalization, feeding problems and sudden infant death syndrome (SIDS).

Of course, sometimes earlier delivery is needed to protect the health of either the baby or the mother – these medically indicated deliveries can be lifesaving. But if your pregnancy is healthy, the March of Dimes recommends that you wait for labor to begin on its own.

How is March of Dimes addressing this problem in Florida? The "Elimination of Non-medically Indicated (Elective) Deliveries Before 39 Weeks Gestational Age; Quality Improvement Toolkit" was developed by March of Dimes, California Maternal Quality Care Collaborative and the California Department of Public Health; Maternal Child and Adolescent Health Division. The toolkit provides guidance and support to obstetrical providers, clinical staff, hospitals, and healthcare organizations to develop an efficient and successful quality improvement program to eliminate elective deliveries prior to 39 weeks.

A total of 25 hospitals in California, Illinois, New York, Texas, including six in Florida have been selected to participate in a pilot study which was completed during 2011. These five states account for nearly 40% of all births and approximately 38% of the preterm births in the United States. The project is part of a national March of Dimes Big 5 State Prematurity Collaborative which has a shared agenda focused on eliminating non-medically indicated deliveries before 39 weeks.

The March of Dimes is asking hospitals and health professionals to implement quality improvement programs that follow American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (ACOG) guidelines to help prevent unnecessary early inductions and c-sections. C-sections can be lifesaving for women and their babies, but they also pose real risks. Health care providers and women should weigh the medical circumstances and make a decision based on potential benefits and risks to mom and baby.
